Looks like fun

Dundee may not be able to hear, but he sure knows fun when he sees it.

When Dundee arrived at the Sanctuary, his caregivers knew they'd have to keep him entertained. Just 10 months old, he was full of that herding breed energy and drive. But he was deaf, which made him rely solely on his eyes to find distractions. If he didn't get a job to do, he might begin to chase shadows and lights obsessively.

His Best Friends caregivers were on it. They wouldn't let him get lost in a world of chasing every speck or dust. Instead, they took him to the Sanctuary agility course to get exercise and show off his moves. They also taught him hand signals so that he could learn "sit", "stay", "come" and all the other tricks that smart dogs like him should know.

They filled his days with learning and excitement. We think he's really going to miss this place. But not too much. That's because Dundee has landed a home with someone who loves herding breeds and can't wait to keep the agility work going.

Do you have a kitten?

Oomph. That's not a kitten. But we'll take him!

When the Ayoso family came to the Best Friends Pet Adoption Center in Salt Lake City, they knew just what they wanted - a precious little kitten. Kittens are wonderful to adopt, of course, but sometimes pets have plans of their own. Dwight, one of the biggest, burliest cats at the center, decided that the Ayosos were his people. When he saw them coming, he made them fall in love, in no time flat. His attitude was, "Why would you adopt something small when you could have all of this?" And the rest is history.
